

Volunteer role description

FUNDRAISING GROUP MEMBER

Across the UK, Fundraising Groups raise money and awareness for Macmillan in their community. In this role, you'll use your creativity, energy and enthusiasm for fundraising which will help us ensure that together, we can be right there for people with cancer

What's involved?

- Get creative coming up with ideas for your fundraising events – we've had everything from supermarket collections, fashion shows, music events to waterbombing championships!
- Organise and help with your group's fundraising events
- Raise awareness of Macmillan services for people affected by cancer in your community
- Other ad-hoc activities may arise depending on the fundraising group's needs

'Being part of a fundraising group is lots of fun and very rewarding'

Christine, fundraising group member

What will you get out of it?

- Develop your communication skills to show what Macmillan provides
- Enhance your ability to engage people by listening and taking on a leading role within the group
- Use your networking skills to help grow the group's influence
- Be a part of a friendly team that makes a difference in the community
- Deliver results by reaching fundraising milestones
- Receive an induction, relevant training, the support you need to carry out your role and agreed out-of-pocket expenses reimbursed within our guidelines

How much time should I give?

As this role is key to the success of the group, it will require at least a few hours a month.

We want to help everyone with cancer find their best way through, from the moment of diagnosis, so they're able to live life as fully as they can. You can be someone who makes that happen. Whether it's minutes or months, hours or days, the time you give by volunteering with Macmillan really does matter.
